Ever since the bash button became acceptable for entertainment, there has also been an argument that video games are numb to our brains. These violent names - think GTA and Call of Duty - deform our gray matter and turn us into bloodthirsty psychopaths. It's exhausting. But a new study, published in the journal Frontiers in Psychology, found that obsessively playing violent games does not reduce the amount of empathy people feel towards in the long run. But what does all this button bashing do with your body in the short term? Let's smash it for you, from random completist. This content is imported from a third party. Despite what all parents say, video games can be good for your eyes. Compared to non-gamers, those who played first-person shooters for five hours a week were found by the University of Rochester to have a greater ability to choose details amid the clutter and distinguish gray. So next time you drive in the fog, thanks to Call of Duty. Triple-A score If you play regularly but does not exceed five hours a week, your brain will become more effective in three areas - pariamal lobe, frontal lobe and anterior cingulate, all of which deal with your attention functions, reports Vision Research magazine. You'll also be better at multitasking, according to cognitive scientist Daphne Bavelier. Time is right to get the most out of the games, says Bavelier, we need to view them as we wine: the right amount at the right time. A good glass of Grand Cru Theft Auto, according to her research, will be 40 minutes a day, not just before bedtime. Remember: Drinking wine while playing is a danger to every pale color carpet and carpet. Easy is even the bus-travel explosion of the main game you're well. A study by the University of East Carolina found that just 30 minutes a day playing casual games like Candy Crush Saga eases depression and anxiety. But set a timer: performing tasks causes rewarded brains wanting more. That's where missed stops and all night come in. Blended benefits of Varied Diet Games are also helpful. Molecular Psychiatry has published an article outlining how platformers, like Mario's games, can enhance spatial navigation, strategic planning, and working memory. Tetris, meanwhile, has been shown to reduce cravings for food and medications, reduce PTSD memories and boost brain growth. Online beauty boxes have become the hottest good trend. The fact is that you take a subscription - for three, six or 12 months - and then sent a goody box containing four to six mini and full-size product samples. But are they more of a style than a substance? We took subscriptions with five schemes and found that the quality changed - some sent less than impressive sachets, while others were much more generous. Best Glossybox.co.uk (10 euros per month based on three-month three-month 8.33 euros per month on the basis of a 6-12-month subscription) contained five beautifully packaged products. The boxes featured well-known brands such as Clinique and Lancome and some great new finds too. We also tried Love Me Beauty (35.85 euros), SoukSpuk (44.85 euros), Birch Box (38.95 euros) Love Lula (37.50 euros). All prices are based on a three-month subscription. GH Verdict Beauty Boxes is a good but expensive way to try before you buy and get hard to find niche products. But overall we were disappointed with the range and variety of what was on offer in these boxes. A 15 ml sample of Tresemme shampoo, for example, is not the most inspiring gift. While you can tailor the choice to your skin and hair type, it's not possible to request specific products - so if you have a heart set on trying a new mascara this month, it's too bad.
